W. H. BROWN BOY.—Nine days ago, we announced that a boy named James Riley Proctor went a fishing or to catch drift wood, and did not return. Yesterday his body was found, at the mouth of the Bayou, just above the upper saw-mill. He had been drowned. His age was nine years. The funeral took place yesterday.

W. H. WAUGH'S MIRROR OF ITALY.—Was exhibited here last evening for the last time. The proprietors did a good business in Evansville. Yesterday afternoon there were 1,000 children in to see the panorama, and last night there was a full house.

It is exhibited next at Vincennes, then at Terre Haute, then at Richmond during the Horse Fair, then at Indianapolis.

A RARE PHENOMENON.—Last evening, there occurred an occultation of Venus, a sight not often to be seen. The sky was perfectly clear, and the planet shone with great brilliancy. The moon was in her first quarter, and seemed like a silver boat gliding along the "upper deep."

When we first noticed the position of the two bodies, the planet just touched the southern horn of the moon, and blazed with a brilliant and steady light. The spectacle forcibly reminded us, without much stretch of fancy, of the guiding lamp on the prow of the boat which bears "Old Age" into the "dark unknown," in the last of the splendid series of pictures illustrating "Cleopatra's Voyage of Life." Only the venerable form of the lonely passenger was lacking to complete the picture. [If we were not in such a sentimental mood we could easily supply that figure, in imagination, with "the man in the moon."]

Venus disappeared behind the horn of the moon, and was wholly hidden from view a half hour. Quite a number of citizens were out, witnessing this beautiful phenomenon.

This occultation is an event which has been anxiously looked for by astronomers, and the scientific world has been on the qui vive in anticipation of the occasion.

WASHINGTON, April 24, m.—H. Wright of Pennsylvania made a strong appeal for harmony. If harmony did not prevail here, the nomination to be made would not be worth the paper on which it was recorded when brought before the people. He was in favor of the rule that every delegate should be permitted to cast his vote in accordance with his convictions and with those of his constituents. Pennsylvania had never voted as a unit, except when their sentiment was unanimous. He closed by demanding the previous question, and the vote was taken on that part of the report relating to a preceding offer, and it was adopted unanimously.

Mr. Flournoy then returned, thinks, to consider moderation and harmony. We are all marching under one flag. The Democratic party have but one flag, the flag of our country. He denounced sectionalism, and hoped no more difficulties would be made to such divisions.

The Hon. Caleb Cushing was then introduced to the Convention, and made a most eloquent and patriotic speech. His allusion to Calhoun and his motto of "truth, justice, constitution," called forth prolonged cheering. It was the destiny of the Democratic party to stand upon this and strike down and conquer the traitorous fanatics arrayed against it in one section of the Union. Mr. Cushing was again loudly cheered upon the conclusion of his address.

About half an hour was then spent in settling the Vice Presidents, and arranging for the Secretaries, and also preparing for a formal and energetic enforcement of parliamentary rules in the future proceedings of the Convention. A warm debate then sprung up on the rule reported by the committee on organization, in which Messrs. Richardson, McCook, Cessey of Pennsylvania, Barry of Mississippi, Josiah Randall and many others took part. Several of the Southern delegates opposed the rule, Mr. Randall also opposing it, deeming that certain refractory members in the delegation proposed to violate and misrepresent their constituents in voting for Douglas, whose nomination, in his opinion, would lead to certain defeat. He then went into a review of the action of the preceding Democratic Convention on this subject.

Mr. Richardson rose to reply, and asked of his friends and the public to judge him that he was constantly receiving fresh supplies of Quenware, Glassware, etc., he will get, per Anteport, next trip, an immense stock just from first bands, in the largest variety, the extensive establishment, Main street, next to the Branch Bank, is the place to buy chin, porcelain glass, crockery, and other ware, wholesale or retail, at liberal prices.
